THE

Life, Charaller, and Death

OF

Judas Iscariot,

That Traytor who betray'd our Bleffed LORD and SAVIOUR

JESUS CHRIST.

Glying a Full and True

ACCOUNT

Of the iwhole Course
Of that False Disciple's Actions from his Birth, to his accursed and untimely Death.

The Third Edition.

Licensed and Enter'd according to All of PARLIAMENT.

Printed for A. Smith in Pye-Corner, 1724.

month and the state of the same of Anisau bas sidioses et les el sel ara debibs bout serto BL or a livera bross has been been San Andrea. The WOOM OF Proposition de Sento te liga during 1785

The Life and Death of Judas Iscariot.

TUdas Ifcariot was descended from one Simon a Tanner, living near Joppa, a noted Sea-port Town in Paleftine, now in poffession of the barbarous and inhumane Turks. Before his good and pious Mother, for he came of Virtuous Parents. brought him into the World, being one Night very roffles, the at last fell to fleep, and dream'd that the Child fhe then went with, would prove to her great Grief and Sorrow, both a Thief 2 and a Murderer: So awaking very much affrighted, the grew thereupon very melancholly; and being greatly diffurb d in Mind, the was studying and contriving Night and Day what way the might prevent the Odium and Scandal which fremed to fall upon her Family by the Production of this Birth. At length:

her Sorrow increasing more and more up Ы on her, infomuch that her Husband tool Notice of her Uneafinels he press'd he to tell him the Occasion of it; so with much Perswafion the at last acquainted him with the Cause of her Grief, and the Means which the defigned to prevent it but he endeavour'd all he could to alie nate her heart from thebarbarous though of laying violent Hands upon the Infant when it was born, telling her, that per haps the Almighty Dispoler of the World who suleth all Things visible and invisible, might fo order Matters that the Child might die young, or take it away before it was grown up, with feveral Accidents which Providence unknown to her and him might bring about to alter those unhappy Effects which her frightful Dream presaged Ominous : So being pretty well fatisfied with these Sayings of her Husband, the grew formewhat eafed in her Mind.

About a Week after this Discovery to her Husband, she fell in Travail; and having a very hard Labour of it, she was not expected to go through the same without losing her Life; but by Prayers made for her safe Delivery, she was at ore up aft, through God's great Mercy, fafely d tool deliver'd of a lovely Boy; so very beau-d he liful was the Child, that all his Kinsfolke with and Friends were mightily pleased and ainted contented with the Sight of fo handsome an Infant; and all the Neighbours came far and near to fee it. But it happen'd that he had a strange fort of a Mark upon his left fide ; for under his Breaft, as Several Authors writes, was a Cross, a Gallows, Money and 2 Daggers, which did not only cause Wonder and Admiration in all that beheld it, but it made his Mother long the more to know what it portended, so that she resolved to her self to go to a Magician as foon as the went abroad again.

5

nd the

ent it

alie

ough

ntant

t per

Vorld

nvifi-

t the way

eral n to lter

tful

eing

ings

eaf-

to nd

728 ne

15 at

A

At eight Days old the Child was Circumcifed by the Name of Judas, and at his Circumcifihn there was a vast Number of Speciators to fee the Ceremony because it was perform'd; moreover. the first Child she ever lay in with, there was a most Noble, Feast prepared for all his Friends and Relations, and after the Batertainment, which lasted four Days, was over, his Mother then began to think on the former Dream, refolving when the went abroad, to confult a Masician open the fame, also on the Marks which the Child brought into the World with

Sc

fin

to

to m

to

V

D

with it, and to prevent, if possible, the Shame and Difgrace which the fear'd would fall upon her Family through its Birth. So the time of her Purification being come, the was brought to the House of the Lord, where Praises and Thankigiving being offer'd up to the Almighty for her fafe Deliverance from her late Danges of Child-bearing, all which Holy Offices being perform'd as usual in the Jewish Church, the returned Home; and keeping her former Refolution, the made known her Intent of going to a Magician to a Relation whom the could coulide, and accordingly fent her to enquire of him, what might be the most convenient Time for coming to him in Privacy; so the Magician appointed the Time when the might confult with him, the disguised herself to give him a Visit, after this manner.

The Day being come, her Relation waits on her, and dreffing her felf in a Veil made of cunning curious Work, fo that none could perceive her Face, or know, who he was, away they went to the Magician's House; where revealing her Dream, and telling with what Mark her Child was born, he called for Pen, Ink and Paper, with which calculating a Scheme

Scheme of Judas's Mativity, and having finish'd it, he shook his Head and seem'd to change his Countenance to the Symptoms of a very forrowful Afpect. made the Mother formize what he had to declare was not tending to good News however being imparient to know the Event, the urged him the more importunately to give his Judgment on the Childs Nativity, be it good or bad. Herenpon the Magician tells her, that as the had dreamt, fo it would prove, for your Child will be both a Thief and a Murde-. ser, but what is worfe, it is the Decree of Heaven that he shall betray the Lord of Life, who as yet is not revealed to us, in felling his Blood for a very small Price, for which most wicked Fact, he will lay violent Hands on himself, and so die an At this the fell into unnatural Death. a Sween, and much ado they had to fetch her to Life again, but when the was come to herfelf, after shedding many tears, the with her Relation and the Magician confulted in what manner they might be out of the hearing or feeing those Difasters which were likely to enfue, not only to the great Sorrow and Trouble of herfelf, but also to the perpetual Difgrace of all her Family. Many

the

ir'd its ion

the

nd

Al-

131 ch

in 2 3

he

2 nft

n

t

T

ſ

Many were the Stratagems and Contrivances witich they ponder'd for the Destruction of young fudas, among which this was one that the Mother thought upon, that he should have a little Bark made, and fo fet him floating away on the Sea. They liked her Project very well, but how to get it fecretly made and conveyed to her, was the dubious Matter in Question. At last the Magicician undertook to have a thing made like what she proposed, and to convey it to her without any Suspicion: so leaving the Refult to his Management and Contrivance, they took their Leave of each other, and parted for that time.

The Magician to perform his Promife fends for one ROTA a cunning Artist in such Affairs, and telling him what manner of Bark he wanted him to make, the Artisteer with his Pencil draws out a Sketch or Figure of what he intimated, which being correspondent to the Magicians Design and Intention, for the Form of the Watry Mansions was to be in the shape of a Shell. Rota took the Draft thereof along with him, and went about it with all speed.

The Bark, or rather Box as one may

(9)

e h it

k

n

2

-

e

t

gall it, being finisht in about a Week's Time, for the Man was forc'd to work on it by Stealth, to avoid all Suspicions, he brought it home to the Magician, who fatisfy'd him to his own Content. Then sending Notice thereof to Judas's Mother's Kinswoman, she brought her in the same Disguise as before to see it; and very well pleased she was with the Contrivance thereof, for fo artificially was it made, that no Rain por Water could penetrate it, and a very pretty Place was made to lay the Child et length in a little Bed, where its little, tender Arms and Legs being fecurely, lasht, he could not roul out, neither one way or the other.

Now a Debare arose how the Child should be brought out of the House, without the Knowledge of the Father, or Maids that waited on it; this sinal Consultation held a long while; but at length it was agreed upon, that the Kinswoman should take the Child away under her Veil, for it being customary for the Jewish V Vomen to wear Veils, it gave no Suspicion of going to the House in that Habit; but as the Father intirely loved the Child, and fearing he would soon miss it, as visiting it very often in the

th

to

pi tt

ſè

d o B

the Day, it was further concluded among them, that if he wanted to fee it, they would feign the Child fick, so could not be brought out of its Chamber, and that furthermore the Servants that attended it being under the Mothers Command, she could for her Favour do what she pleas's with them to stiffe the Matter.

But after this Conclusion, there arose by and by another Dispute, which almost fruftrated thei, other Defigns & Projects, which was this; they were almost put to a Non-plus how they should prevent the Knowledge of the Lofs of the Child to the Father, because it could not be supposed that it was always fick; so to make this Circumstance the most feafible, it was refelv'd upon to get fome Body's dead Child to carry off their Intrigue and till fuch a Child could be procur'd, it was to be reported to the Father, that young Judas was sometimes better, and sometimes worfe, till they had accomplished their Defigns.

The next Day the Kinswoman, as it was order'd before, came to see her, and then the Child was to fall fick, and to be carried up Stairs into another Chamber; then the Mistress calling her Maids together,

1

t

t

ther, she took them one by one into a private Room, and enjoyn'd them severally to secress, with fair Promises, and a piece of Money too in the Bargain, which they having all promised, then the Husband, when he came home was to be made sensible of the Childs Illness; and in order thereto the Childs Mother was to put on dejected Looks, a sad Countenance, and great Sorrow, by shedding a multiplicity of Tears, as well knowing her fond Husband would foon enquire the cause of her Discontent, Accordingly her Husbaud returning home in the Evening, and finding his Wife and Servants all in a melancholly Disposition, his VVites Eye-lids being most fadly fwell'd with weeping, he asked her the Reason of it, then with a seeming Grief and Tears in her Eyes, tells him, that her dear Child was fo very ill, that the was forced to carry ir up Stairs to keep him quiet, and froe from the Noile of the Streets. Her Husband could not reft but up he must go fee it; and the Maids to make it more feafible, they pinched the Child, which fet it a crying, and put it into fuch Pain, that when he came up to behold it, he was perswaded that it was out of Order, and at last by the Intreaty treaty of his Wife, he went down and left it, with a special Charge to his Maids to take care of it.

1

d

8

1

1

Next Day her Relation putting on her-Veil, comes to her House, in order to carry, the Child to the Magician's, and when the had brought it there, about an Hour after the Mother came in her Difguife, as before, and there they try'd the Child in the faid Bark, which fitted him very well; then there was Cloaths provided fuitable to the condition it was like to undergo, and an upper Garment made of Skin, all over Oyl'd, to preserve him from wetting, in case any Rain or Sea-Water foaked through the Bark; then it came into the Mothers Head to know how as strange People might tell the Child's Name; if kind Pate should drive the Bark to fome Remote Country; hereupon it was ordered that his Name of Judas should be inscribed on Parchment, and ty'd round his Neck, which was accordingly done, and all things being in a readiness to send him to seek his Fortune so young, his Mother taking her last Farewel of her de ar Baby, kissing it over aud over, the Tears trickled down her Cheeks apace; withal crying out, Ob, What diffressed Mifery is come upon me,

dis

11

to

d

n

Ce n

3

97 e

n

1-

n

T

.

.

e

1-h

-

5 r

t

7

me, that I must thus part with my poor inthat it had never been born, or that I had died at the Birth of it, rather than to be Separated from my poor Infant. What Dangers must it be exposed to ? It may be sunk to the bottom of the Sea cast upon some de-Solate Island, where there is no People to take care of it, cast upon some Rock where it may be dasht to pieces, or devoured by some wild Beaft, monstrous Fish or ravenous Vulture. And muft this fweet, barmless Babe smiling in the Face of me who is going to be So barbarous to it, undergo all these Casualties and Miseries for a foolist Dream, I say? Alas, it wracks my Soul to think what my pretty Infant must fuffer for my whimsical Conceit of believing ill Dreams to be Ominous. But above all how Shall l'excuse this barbarous, base and treacherous Action to my dear loving Husband who tenders the Child as the very Apple of his Eye? Did be know what I have done, be would never be reconciled to me more. Thus with these and a great many more forrowful Expostulations upon the parting with her dear Child, the fell into a Swoon at the very thoughts of it.

The Magician and her Relation were all this while in a great Surmize and Ago

(14]

Def

ng

Col

wi

190

The

COL

ZO

he lit cl

C

of

te

Agony at her passionate Expressions, and could not likewife forbear fhedding tears, but at the fight of her present Condition they ran to her Affistance, and in some thort rime brought hear her felt again. And after the was pretty well recovered her Relation and the Magician very much comforting of her, withal telling her. that se the Child, when it grows up, will be both a Thief and a Murderer, and moreover lay violent Hands upon himfelf, to the utter Difgrace of her and ber Family, the must therefore stand to her former Refolution, or elfe undergo the Shame and Infamy that must certainly brand her Generation for ever, in case the permitted the Child to live.

At this Discourse the seem'd somewhat satisfy'd, and at last consented to its imbarking; so the Magicians House standing near the Sea-side, they had but a small Walk thither; but the Mother beginning again to take compassion on her Infant with mournful Expressions and shedding of Tears, the Magician speaking somewhat passionately to her, cry'd, Are you bewitch'd? What would you have the whole Matter discover'd to the World, and endanger our Lives? If you are perign, I'll e'n go home again. Then going back to his own House, he was resolved to leave her to do as the pleased with the Child; but by the Kinswoman perswading her to call him back again, the orders them to put to Sea, for the could not see the Action done herself, so going forward to the Magicians House, her Consin and the Magician threw the little Bark, wherein the Child was inclosed, into the Sea, which a strong Tide carrying it swiftly away, it was soon out of fight, and then they went home to tell the Mother what they had done.

VVhen

When the had receiv'd the fatal News! the took her leave of the Magician and her Kinfweman, and returned home. where the found her Maids with heavy Hearts, attending her Coming, with a longing Expectation of hearing what the had done in the Matter, and having declared all the knew, and wept a little, they strove all they could to comfort her and told her they had got a dead Child of a Neighbours of theirs, and had stript it and laid it out, as is usual in Funeral Cafes, fo going up to fee it, it feemed unto her, not to be unlike her own, which pleased her not a little , and her Husband coming home, and finding her all bath'd in Tears again, but yet loath to ask her the Reason of her being so disconfolate. he enquired of the Maids what was the matter with his VVIfe. They told him the Child was dead, and that their Mistress had been crying and wringing her Hands till the fell into a Swoon; therefore Sir, said the Maids, we do advise you to bury it as private, and as foon as you can, that our Miffress may not be again troubled at the fight of it.

177

75

d

e, y

1C

e,

of

it

2-h

d

d e, n

i-

....

Accordingly, taking their Advice, he has it that Night privately carried to a Relations House, from whence, in a Day or two's Time it was decently interrid; and thus ended the Catastrophe of his supposed Son Judas, which forely grieved him to the very Heart, but as the Stroke of Destiny cannot be helped, he thought the Lord's Will mutt be done, and so contented himself as well as he could.

But now let's see what is become of young Judas indeed. It happening that as the Bark was driving along the Coast called Iscariot, where there was a mighty Rock, on which Theophilus, the King of that great Country, used to recreate himself, in seeing the Ships pass too and fro, he at last espy'd at a Distance this little Bark or Boat wherein Judas was turn'd adrift, whereupon ordering some of his Servants to put a Boat out presently, they came up to the Bark and brought it to the King, who causing it to be opened, they found the Babe alive with this Inscription on his Neck, My Name is Judas.

The King perceiving it to be a very fine Child, commanded him to be brought to his Court, and then called him Iscariot because he was found floating on that Coast which was so named. The King was well pleased with him, and took all whe tender Care imaginable of him, even using him as if he was own Child, in giving him good Education and Learning; and as he grew up, he was not only Company for the best of the Gentry, but also a Play fellow for the Kings Son; and coming to Mans Estate, he was made one of the Kings Council, besides having other great Dignities and Offices bestowed upon him.

B

But in process of Time the King's Son and this Judas Iscariot being abroad a merry-making, they happen'd to have a Quarrel which grew to fuch a Height, that they fought, and in the Rencounter he had the Misfortune to kill the young Prince. Upon this unfortunate Mischance he disguised himself, in order to facilitate his Escape; and for fear of lofing his Life he was forced to take upon him the mean Quality of a Servant; but being afterwards out of Service, happen'd to come to Joppa, the Place of his Nativity, tho unknown to him, he was there received as a Servant again in a Gentlemans Houle and behaved himfelf very well.

But whilst he was there, his Mistress walking out to take the Air, saw some very sine Fruit in a Garden, and being with

Child,

6

.

1 191

211

Si mice

0-

of et ac

0 u

.

8 2

2

D

.

Child the long'd for fome; so giving fundar Money when the came home to go & buy some of the said Fruit, he being of a covetous Temper and disposed to keep the Money; he attempted to steal the Fruit, but going over the Pales, the Man of the House, who was his Father, espying him he endeavoured to oppose him. So a Combat arising betwixt the Father and the Son, Judas killed him, and was forced to make his Escape a second Time.

Abour a Year or two after he came thisther again in Difguse, and finding he was not known, he resided in quiet; and being a very handsome young Man, his own Mother, not knowing him to be her Son, fell in Love with him, and in a very short time married him.

But after he had lived with her some time, she espied the Marks before mentioned, which struck Admiration in her, for by those Marks it must needs be her own Child, whereupon she examined him from whence he came, so he giving her as good an Account as he was capable of, the from his Words gather d so much which confirmed her Supposition, that from that very Time she made a Resolution tion never to be Carnally concerned with him again.

12

01

After this, Judas hearing of the Fame of our bleffed Saviour Jesus Christ, and having a Remorse of Conscience for what Wickedness he had done in his Life-time but more particularly for the two Murders, he, by his Mothers Perswasion of desiring him to take up and amend, follow dour Saviour, and in process of time became one of his Apostles.

For it happening that Jesus came that way, Judgs seeing many of his Miracles, and hearing what he preached, he mightily admired his Doctrine, and was so Zealous a Professor, that our Saviour admired and chose him for one of his Apostiles.

And when our Saviour had finished the Work, he Instituted the Divine Supper, and sat down with them, and knowing what Judas had done, he said, Verily one of you shall betray me.

At which Words the Apostles were very forrowful, and began every one to say to him, Lord, is is 1? He reply'd, He that hat dippeth his Hand with me in the hish shall betray me, but woe unto that dan, it had been better he had not been out.

th

ne

nd

ne or-

of ol-ne at

5, h 60 d-

10

1, 84

Then Judas faid. Master, is it I? Jesus inswered, Then hast said it. And then Judas had no sooner received the Sop, out the Devil entered into him, and he eft our Saviour and Disciples, and went to the Jews, with whom he bargained to betray his Lord and Master for thirty pieces of Silver, withal telling them, that he whom he kissed was he whom they were to take.

So our Saviour shortly after going into the Garden of Geth femane to Pray, after he had done, being exceeding affiliated with Grief, he found his Disciples asleep, and coming thrice to awake them, with these importunate Words, What, could not you watch with me one Hour? He had no sooner done speaking to them the last time, but Judas appear'd at the Head of a great Number of People, arm'd with Clubs and Staves, boldly approaching our Saviour, treacherously kist him, saying, Hail Master.

Our

Our Lord reply'd, Doft thou betray with a Kifs? And then went to meet thou who came to take him, asking them whom they fought? with so powerful a Voice as made them fall to the Ground. But nevertheless he surrendred himself to those wicked Peoples Power, which God had given them. And although St. Peter drew his Sword and cut off the Ear of Malchus the High-Priests Servant, yet so far was our Saviour from making any Refistance, that he instantly healed the Wound, and reprehended the Apostle.

ad no floorer destring to them the aftime, but the Head at the Head for a great Namber of Marin, armid with ng philosoppe y little copyed from ray off om

ice, neoff
and ew hus was ace,
and